

AS SEEN BY A WASHINGTON WOMAN

THE CRY OF THE BABIES.

One of the many tasks set for the Camp Fire Girls in their list of desirable accomplishments is the differentiating of the various sorts of baby cry—the cry of weariness, the cry of pain, the cry that is simply an appeal for grown folk's attention, the cry of hunger, etc. To the expert, of course, all baby cries sound more or less alike, but to those who, like the little Camp Fire Girls, take the trouble to notice, there is a decided difference in the meaning of these various wails. And of them all there is surely none so pitiful as the baby cry for hunger—unless it be that cry combined with the cry of pain. No heart is so hard and no ear so untuned to the cry of children as to listen to this helpless appeal unmoved.

And now we are hearing the hunger-pain cry of the babies of Germany. There are some 5,000,000 of these helpless ones who are either already suffering the pangs of hunger or who are in danger of so doing in case the war continues. No matter how one-sided your attempt at neutrality may be, no matter if you have friends and relatives fighting on the side of the allies this appeal of the babies of the central empires cannot fail to move you. This is the latest and one of the most pressing of the war appeals. And, although contributions to help are to be addressed to Mr. Carl Schurz, treasurer of the Citizens' Committee, in New York city, the campaign to raise funds for the milk supply is in no way one of national or racial bias.

Secretary Lansing has promised to grant safe conduct to the supplies when they are ready to be sent and arrangements have been made with various condensed milk and milk powder concerns in this country for large consignments of their output. In the meantime the cry of the babies is becoming more and more acute. That American women are about to undertake this good work with the same zeal that they have shown for other innocent war victims is to be a token of their ability to hear the appeal of humanity above the din of war and race hatred.

Not one "Biddy" arrived on the White Star Liner Adriatic last Saturday when she docked in New York. There was not in her entire steerage or second-class passenger list a single young woman looking for domestic work in this country. The young women who in normal times would have arrived in goodly number, have enough to do in the old country at just as tempting wages as they would find in this country.

Yet only a few months ago experts made the statement that the war would tend greatly to increase our supply of domestic servants. With the killing of thousands, even millions, of husbands, fathers and suitors, so these observers said, there would be a very decided over supply of women in European countries. The natural result, it seemed, would be that some of these women would seek a more normal social order of things in this country and other lands unexposed by recent war. Committees were even appointed to be prepared to handle this enormously increased flood of immigration of women. The prediction was made that there would be an abundance of domestic workers, with a consequent decrease in wages for that sort of work.

Well, so far things haven't worked out just that way. To be sure the men have been killed off in terrifying numbers, but for that very reason there is a consequent demand for women workers. At present the women are employed in large numbers in the ammunition factories, but even when the war is over and ammunition in large quantities is no longer needed these women will probably find work a-plenty at fairly good wages in the places left vacant by the men sacrificed in war.

FAMOUS WOMAN, HER BIRTHDAY AND YOURS

By MARY MARSHALL

January 11—Alice Hegon Rice.

Alice Hegon Rice Caldwell, author of the phenomenally successful "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," was born in Shelbyville, Kentucky, in 1859, on January 11.

Her parents were named Rice, and as she was not married until 1902, it was as Alice Hegon Rice that she gained her greatest fame, for "Mrs. Wiggs" appeared in 1901.

There is an interesting story concerning the writing of this book. It is said that the author evolved a short story around Mrs. Wiggs, Lovey Mary and the other characters to which she gave life in her book. She sent the short story to McClure's Magazine, and Mr. S. S. McClure, then at the head of the magazine, realized its worth. He wrote to the author and suggested that she enlarge the short story into a long one, to run as a serial in the magazine and then to be published in book form. Delighted with this encouragement, she went to work with her pen and made it into a short book. But in the meantime she forgot that it was McClure's Magazine to which she had first sent it, and she returned the longer story to the Century. The Century, knowing nothing of its history, accepted and published the story, first as a serial, then as a book, and it was not until the first installment appeared that Miss Rice was made aware of her mistake.

She has taken an active part in club life of various sorts and has written several successful stories beside her first one.

Now It's "Longshorewomen."

Another occupation into which women in Europe have entered in large numbers is that of discharging the cargoes of ships. The master of the tanker Dunayre tells of the taste of war to which he and all hands were treated, while receiving the greatest courtesy from the German officials the cargo of his ship was discharged against his will and part of the story runs as follows:

"You may think strange, but our cargo was discharged by a woman, a young girl, and she was very young, but she was very capable. They got down into the holds and shoveled in coal ships as well as discharging the cargo of the Dunayre. I was told that this was necessary as the able-bodied longshoremen were off to the war."

Miss Cheney to Speak.

Miss Vance Cheney will speak before the Washington League of Right Thinking and Right Living at the auditorium at Woodward & Lothrop's tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock. Her subject will be "The New Mysticism," and she will show that the new mysticism is only a deeper understanding of the teachings of Jesus Christ.

Girls! Beautify Your Hair and Stop Dandruff

Hair becomes charming, wavy, lustrous and thick in few moments.

Every bit of dandruff disappears and hair stops coming out.

For 25 cents you can save your hair. In less than ten minutes you can double its beauty. Your hair becomes light, wavy, fluffy, abundant and appears as soft, lustrous and charming as a young girl's after applying some Danderine. Also try this—moisten a cloth with a little Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. This will cleanse the hair of dust, dirt or excessive oil, and in just a few moments you have doubled the beauty of your hair. A delightful surprise awaits those whose hair has been neglected or is scraggy, faded, dry, brittle or thin. Besides beautifying the hair, Danderine dissolves every particle of dandruff, cleanses, purifies and invigorates the scalp, forever stopping itching and falling hair, but what will please you most will be after a few weeks use, when you see new hair—fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair growing all over the scalp. If you care for pretty, soft hair, and lots of it, surely get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store or toilet counter and just try it.

YESTERDAY I told of my determination to leave melodrama and today I go on spinning the drab little threads of my story.

For several days I pondered upon how best to reach out toward my goal. Then I decided that it would be foolish for me to try to see the managers, knowing very well I would never get beyond the office boy. Or, if lucky enough to pass him, I would find myself face to face with a score of other dignitaries standing between me and the manager, whom I felt would listen to me if I could once get an audience. Such are the little vanities of youth and that assurance which always carries its power.

I wrote eight letters to eight of the leading stars in my profession, telling them that I was not a stage-struck girl, but that I had been a good actress in poor productions ever since I was five years old. All I asked of them was to let me reach the managers through a word from them. Of the managers, I always mentioned Belasco first, for he was the star in my sky which seemed to hold out to me the most brilliant prospects.

Hope Springs Eternal.

Each morning I would rise early, thinking that surely a letter would arrive in answer to one of mine. I would peek out of the window as the old lumbering postman would round the corner and fly downstairs to be the first one to greet him.

"How many letters have you brought for me?" I asked, as I trembled with eager excitement.

"Well—let's see!" he would invariably say, as he shuffled them thoughtfully. "One from Canada, and—and that is about all, as far as I can see, Miss Goldilocks. But I will be around here this afternoon, and there might be a handful by that time."

Little the kindly old man knew how leads his words were to me, and that each time my heart grew heavier and heavier as he came gently handed. Two weeks passed, and no one had answered my letters. Aunt Kate and Aunt Min insisted I live there with them, although they were so cramped for room I had to sleep in the Morris chair. But I was only too glad to stay, for I dreamed that at the eleventh hour a sweet-scented, pink-tinted envelope would come, and in it would be a letter beginning "Dear Little Girl, I am sorry I kept you waiting so long," and ending, "Come to me and I will be very glad to introduce you to Mr. Belasco or Mr. Frohman. Sincerely yours," etc.

Perhaps it would be some day, as Julia Marlowe, Blanche Bates, Maude Adams, Frances Starr or Ethel Barrymore. In my fancy I could never determine which actress would be my guiding star, for across the footlights I loved them equally well.

But she hasn't the time to look into them. Her daily work is prescribed for her, and she cannot sacrifice her rest hours, after three exhausting acts, to interview dozens of ambitious aspirants.

I know how it is myself. So many girls and boys write to me, eager to have me place them in moving picture companies, but I have no power to do so and really very little influence, as I am a salaried artist myself and am always working so hard that I have little time to give to personal interviews.

No Letters.

After two or three weeks of this hoping against hope, I decided I had better start out for myself. Mother kept writing for me to come home to Canada, but I had determined to bring a contract with me. So I replied with encouraging letters that I should not leave until I had succeeded.

It was Monday when I started out, and I went direct to Mr. Belasco's office.

"I would like to see Mr. Belasco," I said hopefully to his secretary, who looked at me with cold, unseeing eyes.

"Very well," he replied. "Come next Monday and I will see if I can get an audience for you."

He took my name and address, and I left the office, my heart almost bursting with song and my feet dancing down the stairs.

"I am to see Mr. Belasco next Monday," I cried as I burst in upon Aunt Kate and Aunt Min. "The man in the office said I could meet him." Never was a week so long, and how my heart thumped when it had passed and the eventful day dawned for me. I arose with the chancellors! And what a brushing of curls there was as I studied the formal little speeches which I would make to Mr. Belasco!

This will have to be continued in my next, as I must not forget my correspondents, and I am as interested in that as I am in the writing of my articles.

Answers to Correspondents.

Viola C. Wyandotte, Mich., makes a mistake if she goes into pictures at eleven years of age, forgetting that an education means more to a girl than the few dollars she might earn if she secured an engagement in a moving picture company. When I was eleven, I would have given anything in the world to have been able to go to school. Instead of that, I was playing in the theater, working day and night, and denied all the pleasure which makes a little girl of eleven happy—school, school friends and a home to live in.

That was a cunning little picture of Virginia O'D., Hoboken, N. J., and I enjoyed her letter, too. Thank you very much, Virginia, I shall put your picture in my album.

Inez V. Cicero, Ill.: I cannot give a formula for writing photoplays, but if you buy one of the trade journals you will find a sample of what they demand of you. A clear, intelligent synopsis of your story is all you have to send to the scenario department of any company.

BIG AUDIENCE HEARS MME. MELBA AT POLI'S

Flutelike Voice of Great Prima Donna Impervious to Ravages of Time.

A large and enthusiastic audience greeted Mme. Melba when she appeared yesterday afternoon at Poli's Theater. The great prima donna's flute-like voice and wonderful technique seem alike impervious to the ravages of time. Other beautiful singers have come to the front in the last twenty years and some have gone their way. But Melba is still Melba.

Assisting her on the program yesterday afternoon were Miss Beatrice Harrison, a very charming and gifted young cellist, and Mr. Gaston Sargeant, Mr. Frank St. Leger was the accompanist.

Mme. Melba sang "Chanson Triste" by Duparc and "Les Anges Pleurent" and "Nymphs et Sylvestres," charming songs of old-fashioned type by Benckers; "Songs My Mother Taught Me" (as an encore), "Addio" from Bohème, and the Ave Maria from Verdi's "Otello." Toist's "Good-Bye" (another encore), group of Scotch songs ("John Anderson, My Jo," "Coming Through the Rye" and "Annie Laurie"), and Ardit's Valse, "Se Saran Rose."

Miss Harrison played a beautiful "Elegie" by Faure, "Cello's strange 'Oriental' and the Wagner-Becker "Preludium," "Requiem" by Schumann and "Vito" by Poppo. Her playing was very well received. Mr. Sargeant has some good notes in his voice, but is not quite up to concert form and should be told to do something with his hands while he is singing. He sang Henschel's "Monks' Hymn" and "In the Great Unknown" by Guy d'Hardelot. He also sang "Rolling Down to Rio," for which he deserves credit, though it is feared that the "Just So" songs are not as familiar to Washington as they should be.

HOUSEWIVES DAILY ECONOMY CALENDAR

By FRANCES MARSHALL.

IN PLACE OF FURS.

This year when fur has been worn more extensively than ever before by way of trimming in every conceivable way there has also been a revival of scarf and muff sets that are not of any sort of pelt, but that are warm and exceedingly attractive.

One of the most attractive of the new scarfs for cold weather is made of blanket cloth lined with a contrasting silk and buttonholed around the edge in heavy worsted to match the cloth. With this scarf is a pair of mittens made with silk and buttonholed around the edge of the rim and at the top of the crown with the worsted. One of these in a pretty shade of fawn lined with blue is especially attractive. Any clever woman could make one of these skating sets with the aid of a paper pattern. An embroidered design on the side of the hat and on the ends of the scarf of some contrasting worsted would add considerably to the effect.

For the woman who knits there are all sorts of possibilities in the way of knitted mufflers and caps, as well as muffs. The fad for skating has brought heavy woolen mittens back into fashion and a knitted set of this sort would be very attractive for the woman who is fond of outdoor sports or winter walking.

Various sorts of worsted can be used, in combinations that are most effective. All white for wear in the country, where they don't get easily soiled, are very attractive. And white banded with deep rose, bright blue, green or orange is very pretty. The scarfs have bands at the ends, the caps have a striped border all around. There are caps, too, with a long point to tie like a muffler around the neck.

There are charming cap and muff sets, originally for skating, but quite wearable for walking and other outdoor purposes. These are made of silk and cloth variously combined. The caps fold quite flat when on the head, but when they take the form of a toque. They are softly lined with silk, and quite unadorned. The scarfs go once about the neck and one end is then thrown over the shoulder. One is made of golden yellow broadcloth and black plush, bands of the broadcloth being used for trimming.

HOROSCOPE.

"The stars incline, but do not compel."

Tuesday, January 11, 1916.

Astrologers read this as an uncertain day, since Saturn and Mars are adverse and Uranus is friendly.

All the influences appear to be against the old in politics or business. The beginning of a new era is indicated and in that range order of things those who have ruled must serve.

Owing to the evil power of Mars, this may be a day of disappointments and all who would make the best of opportunities should avoid a tendency toward dissensions and trouble.

In the aspect of Uranus, which has been interpreted as presaging a period of spiritual illumination, there is also warning that madness and insanity will increase.

This is an unlucky day for negotiations concerning the war, especially if an elderly person has influence.

Under this way mining is likely to be unfortunate. There is, moreover, indication of more trouble with the Panama Canal, which will suffer from the effects of an explosion or an earthquake.

The Pope has the forecast of serious anxieties next month, when he should safeguard his health.

Sickness and great mortality among the Indians of the far West are predicted.

Theatrical producers are forewarned of a scheme for speculation that will bring ruin.

Persons whose birthdate it is have the augury of travel and change. They should be careful in all business affairs. Children born on this day may have numerous vicissitudes in life. Many speculators are born under this sign.

Says Husted Harper.

Ideas Husted Harper, historian of the woman suffrage movement in America, says that the view that should be taken of the movement for woman suffrage is "that it is the final step to a real democracy, a genuine republic; the natural and inevitable result of the gradual advance of women in education, law, business, social and public life. If this view be accepted then the many shallow objections are refuted away like chaff in the wind. All of them have been made against women's progress along every line and how ridiculous they appear after victory has been achieved; we smile contemptuously at the charge that the higher education would unfit women for motherhood; that if wives should be allowed to own property they would forsake the home; that women had not enough business ability to sign a check; that if they engaged in public work they would become coarse and masculine. Yet all these objections were seriously urged only a generation or two ago, and women would not be enjoying any of their present advantages had it not been necessary to obtain them by a majority vote of men."

CALVE CONCERT POSTPONED.

Appearance at New National Will Be Delayed by Change in Itinerary.

Announcement was made last night by T. Arthur Smith that owing to a conflict in dates the engagement of Mme. Calve, who was to appear at the New National Theater Thursday afternoon, has been postponed and that the concert will be given at a future date.

The reason for the failure of Mme. Calve to appear on scheduled time is that the flutilla committee, the object of which is to raise funds for the wounded at the French front, has made arrangements to extend the concert tour, and as it is the object to raise as much money as possible for this charity, the committee changed the singer's itinerary to include a number of other cities.

Announcement of the date for the Washington engagement will be made in the near future.

The recommendation of the Commissioners for abolition of the Board of Charities was approved by Dr. George M. Kober, a member of the board, who testified before a subcommittee of the District Committee yesterday. The Commissioners' plan proposes to substitute for the present board a director of charities and an advisory board of five. The recommendation is similar to the one proposed for the school system.
